

International Public Notice: The Great Debate

By Anna Von Reitz

A great debate rocked the world during what people today call the Dark Ages.

We are still dealing with the effects of this today.

It was an ecumenical debate about kings and kingship. One group said that God was the only king and that we were wrong to set up human kings. The other group had swords and axes.

Yesterday, we issued our comments about claims that certain families have brought, seeking to justify their ownership of the Earth.

We have the progeny of Jesus, or so they say, claiming to own the Earth. We have the progeny of Ahkanatan, or so they say, claiming to own the Earth. We have people making even more esoteric claims based on other ancestors.

Yet, we now know that we all stem from a single Mother, known as "Mitochondrial Eve" who lived approximately 250,000 years ago. We are all descended from her, including Jesus.

So we are all family, and we are all related to Jesus. And Ahkanatan. And any other ancestor you might name.

We are all family.

Now, add to that, that the Earth belongs to its Creator, and that we did not create it.

None of this should be big news.

We are still here, still pointing out exactly where we all made a big mistake that needs correction.

We invented kings.

In doing this we made a fundamental error: we took a living man, and turned him into an idol.

This didn't help us and it didn't help him, either.

All it did was give each one of us an excuse for abdicating our own responsibility to self-govern.

We shoved that burden off onto the king.

So now you see the shape of the dilemma. We have a whole lot of people shirking and one poor devil made responsible for them.

We have a man being idolized -- literally -- just like a little god-figure carved out of wood, and by definition, he's not up to playing God.

The kings and queens (or senators and congressmen, bureaucrats ad infinitum) are people like the rest of us, being shoved into a completely untenable position.

This system of choosing people to rule over us is not in line with nature. It is, when you really stop and look at it, insane.

In truth, we're all equal. We are all responsible. And it's time to shoulder up. Nobody can represent us. Not really.

We can already hear the whining in the back row, "But who will lead us?"

If you seek the Creator, you already have a king-- the only rightful and competent king. His order and grandeur is already set before you.

So, stop trying to avoid your destiny. Work together. Learn from Nature. Ask for wisdom.

Seek ye first the kingdom of God....not the kingdom of the world; if you do, everything falls into place.

The truth is, we don't own anything here. It was all given as a gift.

So what will we take pride in and brag about? Our DNA gift? Our intellect gift? Our wealth gift? Our body gift? The land we live on---also a gift?

You see, it's not really a debate about who is better or worse, or who has the stronger claim or all the supposed reasons for it.

Nature itself declares the answer.

As for Jesus, what mission did he give us?

"Love one another as I have loved you."

This is so simple and so difficult, too.

No more hating. No more superiority. No more phony gods to bear our burdens for us. No more debts. No more vengeance. No more gossip. No more fear. No more lies. No more superstitions. No more excuses.

Imagine all of that burden replaced with just one mission?

To love.

To get up every day and love everyone. Give the whole world a big hug. Smile. Forgive. Figure out how you, personally, can make this a better place.

Then you won't need a king, because you will already have one living in your heart.
